CHAPTER 2

Frambook put the documents, which were quite a few, on his desk, and took the vial into his hand.

"I'd say, we start with the potion, in case we'd need some other documents as well. Is that okay with you?"

"Okay. What do I have to do?" Frambook opened a drawer and took a little silver dagger out of it and handed it to Harry.

"You have to cut yourself on your palm with it and add three drops of your blood to the potion. Then we have to wait a minute for the blood to disturb itself in the potion and pour it onto a parchment." He opened another drawer and pulled a rolled up parchment out of it.

"And what exactly shows this potion once it's been poured onto the parchment?", Harry asked the goblin.

"It shows all your titles and vaults, first the inherited by blood from your parents, then those you got if someone who isn't a direct ancestor, but had some relations to you during his live, like your godfather, made you the heir and after those, what you got from other people who you didn't really have any relations with at all. And, if you have one, also the creature and other unusual inheritances."

"Is it really possible, to be made heir of someone I didn't really know at all? How could that be?"

"Yes, it is. Especially in your case, because you are the so called Boy-Who-Lived."

Harry was speechless. He couldn't believe what he just had: the potion on the desk changed its colour to a clear liquid which looked like water. Frambook took it and looked at Harry.

"Mister Potter, are you ready for this?"

Harry just nodded.

The goblin took the potion vial and poured it onto the beginning of the parchment. Harry was shocked at how much writing appeared.

Frambook stared shocked on the parchment before him.

"Who dared to do this? This is unbelievable! Mister Potter, is it in your interest, that we call a goblin healer, to remove all your blocks and the spells and potions used on you?"

"Yes. Is it possible to remove everything? Including the obliviate spells and recover the original memories?"

"They'll try, but it's not sure."

"Then I'd like to try it."

Frambook called Griphook inside and told him to prepare the special room and call for the healer, so that all blocks and spells could be removed and the potion reversed.

xXxXxXx

A still pretty shaken Harry and a really angry Frambook arrived in the prepared room where the healer already waited for them.

"Mister Potter, could you please undress yourself and come over here?"

Harry did as he was told. When he reached his underwear, he stopped.

"Do I have to take off my underwear as well?"

The healer looked up from what he was doing. "No, that isn't necessary. Please, come over here and lay down in the middle of this circle with your feet facing the door."

After he laid down, the healer gave him a potions vial. "This is a sleeping draught, who also helps in opening your magical core for easier access to remove all those blocks. Once I'm done, I'll give you the counter draught and you'll wake up again."

Harry just took the vial, opened it and downed the liquid.

When Harry woke up again, he felt different. He felt like someone, who always wore restrains do hinder his movements and whose restrains now where gone. He felt good. Wrong. He didn't just feel good. He felt unbelievable, unstoppable.

When he went to redress himself, the first item on his pile were his glasses. He was confused, because he already could see perfectly. Harry turned around and asked the goblin healer. He explained him, that not only all of his blocks, the spells and the potion could be removed, but also could most of his memory be recovered and his eyesight got fixed as well. Happy about this explanation, Harry got back to dress himself and afterwards followed Frambook back to his office.
